

Bouquet Dill

HERB Anethum graveolens

Dill Anethum graveolens

Easy to grow. Use the leaves or seeds in pickles, potato salad, egg dishes, salads, and dressings.

Culture: Direct sow beginning as soon as the soil can be worked. Sow in spring and fall. The seeds need light to germinate; press gently onto the soil surface. Late fall sowings will emerge in very early spring. Thin when the plants reach 2–3 inches; space closely for leaves, give more space for seed production.

Harvest: Snip off the leaves and flowers at anytime. Bring in the seeds for fresh use before they begin to dry and brown. Freeze the leaves for use in winter (they lose flavor when dried). Dry the seeds for use as a spice.

Seed Savers: Self sows in mild climates. Harvest the dry seeds just before they drop by gently rubbing the seed heads. Finish drying indoors.
